Plausible Stranger.

Plausible Stranger.

A new form of confidence game was employed yesterday afternoon by an unknown negro to defruid Mrs. Bettle Brooks, who lives at No. 162 O'Fallon street. By an appeal to her mother love he succeeded in unpriving her of the little hoard she had laid by for Christmas.

The man cattlest at her home at 4 o'clock, saying that he was sent by Sherman Hardin of No. 256 Biddle street, who is employed as a car washer at Union Station. Mrs. Brooks knows Hardin well, and the man's conversation indicated a like intimacy. He said that he had been telling Hardin that he had an opportunity to get a good position for the right sort of box, but knew no one who would exactly fill the bill. Hardin had referred him to her, saying that she had a son who would be the right boy.

Airs, Brooks produced the boy, glad to get him work. The stranger decided that he would be acceptable, and told him to go get on his best clothes. In confusion the mother admitted that he was then wearing the best he had, but on hearing that his chance of acceptance would be very slim if the presented himself in such garb, Mrs. Brooks decided that she had best get him a new suit. Soon the stranger and the boy and $8 left Mrs. Brooks's house.

A few moments later the boy returned and said that within two blocks of the house the man had robbed him and fled. The boy and mother appealed to the Fourth District police last night, and the officers are now working on the case.

fire occasioned much excitement and a large crowd gathered to watch the progress of the flames, which had been communicated to the three houses.

The Schmidt home was a one-story frame house. Mr. Schmidt was in Cabanne when the blaze started, but arrived before it was extinguished. Mrs. Schmidt was awakened by a choking odor and a bright glare. She ran screaming to the rear of the house and began to dress. The flames were closing in on her when young O'Birlen rushed from his bome and, throwing Some bed clothing about her, dragged her to the street. After leaving the house Mrs. Schmidt made an attempt to re-enter to secure some valuables, but was detained by neighbors.

Meanwhile, an alarm of fire had been turned in and engine companies Nos. S. If and 9 responded. Before they arrived the kitchen of the O'Brien home had caught fire, and smoke was pouring from the Reehil home, on the west. The flames were soon under control, but not until the Schmidt home was totally destroyed. The kitchen and garret in the O'Brien residence are badly damaged.

Charles Tresenriter, his wife and daughter Anna occupy the upper flat of the Reehil house. They were awakened by the crash of glass and the bright glare.

With the bursting of the glass the room rapidly filled with smoke and the Tresenriters were forced to leave in their night clothes. The flames were sucked in through the windows, and destroyed the wails, carpet and clothing.

Downstairs Mr. and Mrs. Reehil were awakened in the same manner. On account of the close proximity of the burning house the heat was unbearable, and they were forced to seek refuge outside, withous topping to dress. A large part of the furniture was damaged in removing it from the house.

Washington last night. He was accompanied by his two daughters, Mrs. Hitchcock having preceded them by a week. He declared the trains were filled with people going home to spend the holidays, and he was

He declared that he or anything like that. He declared that he had not seen Mr. Akins since the time he came home to vote. "Nor have I had any communication with him," he continued. Concerning the St. Louis World's Fair, Mr. Hitchcock said:

Why, even yesterday, a snipload of locomotives left Philadelphia for South American points. The country was never in a more prosperous condition. The feeling engenaered in the last campaign has subsided, and the country is united. We have great opportunities, and American push is reaching out in every direction. Foreign countries, Germany and Eagland, are beginning to lose their export trade in the competition with the United States. The vountries of the Old World are coming to us not only for our manufactured products, but for money."

Mr. Hitchcock will remain in St. Louis until next Friday. This is the first vacation he bas had since assuming the cuties of office, and, as he said last night, he proposes to enjoy it. He will deliver an address before the St. Louis Republican Club, at its meeting at the Louisiana building, or Vandeventer avenue, next Wednesday night.

After listening to Mr. Laxlan's statement of the position Chief Swingley assured him that it was his belief that the city could aid as desired, and that ere long the park will be in possession of a fire department as well as of water and lighting facilities. This accomplished, the improvement association will bring its powers of persuasion to bear upon Messrs. Haumhoff and Jenkins for better transportation.
